

I was born and grew up in Co. Galway, Ireland. Nestled between the Wild Atlantic Ocean and beautiful rolling landscape of Connemara, I am inspired every day. I am a gardener, photographer, animal and nature lover, so these come in handy as an artist. I have lived close to the sea all my life. Living near the sea and a lake all of my life the smells, sounds and tonal changes in the ocean constantly amaze me.

Coastlines are important to me and for as long as I can remember it was never more than half an hour away. Lakes and rivers as a constant in my life also. I could never see myself move too far away from them. Even now, although I'm embedded in a beautiful landscape of Headford. It's on the northern east edge of Lough Corrib, Salthill, Galway city is to the south, Connemara to the west and Lough Mask to the west. On the east there are beautiful green lands.

These provide vast contrast and are a never-ending source of inspiration. So, it is easy to paint a waterscape (be it lough or sea) overhung by a vibrant emotional skyscape.

Each season brings with it the changing colours, tones and shapes for me to paint. I am self-taught and have been painting since primary school and now paint full time in my studio. I made the big decision to give up a permanent job to pursue my first love, art. I studied at Trinity College, Dublin, and followed that science path for years. Although I loved that too, I wasn't totally fulfilled so I made the change. I love painting my local areas, inspired by the sea, mountains and fields that surround me.

Birds, pets, and wildlife are also a favourite of mine and I continue to try new things all the time. I like trying all different mediums such as oils, watercolours, acrylics and ink.

I also like experimenting with them.

My art is in private collections around the world.

In 2020 Monteoliveto Gallery has appreciated the works of the artist and selected them to participate in the Contemporary art Fair in Paris 2020, postponed due to Covid-19.
